

AKHRAS
DR. FAWAZ

CO-CHAIRMAN

British Syrian Society

Fawaz Akhras is the Medical Director of Cardiac and Medical Health Services and Consultant Cardiologist at the Cromwell Hospital in London. He completed his postgraduate studies at King's College Hospital – University of London, where he also obtained his higher degree in Internal Medicine and Cardiology.

In 1992, during his post as Senior Lecturer in Cardiology at the Westminster and Charing Cross Hospitals, he was appointed Chief of Cardiology at King Fahd Military Hospital in Jeddah where he was responsible for the creation of a new cardiac department.

He developed the first interventional cardiac research programme in Syria, which has subsequently led to their integration into multi-centre European research studies. His work at present is focused on his primary interest in interventional cardiology, which provides the platform for his on-going clinical research.

Such an achievement came on the back of his extensive experience in clinical cardiac research. He has published a large number of research papers in international medical journals, and presented numerous lectures at both national and international scientific conferences. He is also known for his marked contribution to the development of the first physiological pacemaker, which is now widely used around the world in the treatment of patients with heart block.

He is the recipient of several awards in recognition of his personal contribution to clinical and scientific research in cardiology that bridge the basic and clinical sciences.

He is a fellow of the European Society of Cardiology, the American College of Cardiology, the American Heart Association, the British Cardiac Society, the British Cardiovascular Intervention Society and the British Society of Echocardiography.

He is actively engaged in teaching and is a member of the Order of William Harvey for Education in recognition of his commitment to education at the American College of Cardiology.

He is a founder member and Co-Chairman of the British Syrian Society in London and Damascus.